Struggling to find her culinary voice, pigeonholed Culinary Network TV star, Taylor Green (Cahill), is stuck in a rut as a cheesy cook on a show called "Quick, Easy and Delicious." After presenting a new show which is rejected by the network, she decides to return home, to sort out her future before making any permanent career decisions. Upon returning home, she runs into her childhood sweetheart, Jacob (Kove), and tensions begin building again over their long-ago breakup. Her attention is quickly turned to the discovery that their family restaurant that provided so many loving memories of her grandmother is up for sale. Determined to prevent the sale, Taylor devises a plan to rekindle her father's passion for cooking by entering them in the town's annual Sugar Festival cooking competition. While rediscovering her passion for food, Taylor is forced to choose between her budding relationship with Jacob, saving the family's restaurant, and her dream career.

"A Taste of Love" is from Digital Caviar. Steve Demmler, Tony Armer, and Nick Parlin are executive producers. Todd Yonteck, Lincoln Lageson and Erin Cahill serve as producers. The film is directed and written by Michael E. Brown & Conrad De La Torres.
